VOLOS CITY

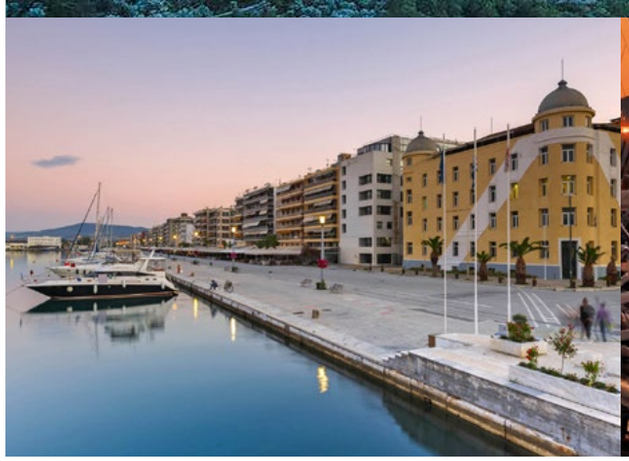

Located in central Greece, under the shadow of mountain Pelion, Volos is a city of ancient myths and history. Its port is where our quest begins as modern Argonauts, seeking the freedom of sailing. By the seaside of Volos Port there are numerous café-bars and restaurants, where you can enjoy your time before you set sails with your yacht. In traditional restaurants, known as “Tsipouradiko/Ouzeri”, you can enjoy the local culinary experience, “tsipouro” with “meze”. There are many options for you to enjoy your evening, pleasing anyone’s appetite or the desire of an intense nightlife.

AMALIAPOLI

Amaliapoli (named after former Queen Amalia of Greece), or Mitzela as locals call it, is a charming little village inside the Pagasitikos Gulf. There are taverns where you can enjoy fresh seafood and dishes of the local cuisine, and beach bars on the organized beach where you can enjoy coffee or cocktails.
Don't miss the sunset from Loutraki Bay and the lovely view from the church's terrace. Across the seaside lies the small island of Kikinthos, hosting only the small chapel of Aghia Marina. Small bays, clear-watered beaches accessible by boat and the Underwater Shipwreck Museum Diving Park are awaiting to be explored.

PALEO TRIKERI

The island, located on a ridge on the southern arm of Pelion, is one of Greece's undiscovered gems. It is so small, that within 2-3 hours of walking through hillsides covered in thyme and juniper to deserted beaches and coves, you can see all of it. Only about 20 people live here full time. There are no roads, and no cars, transport is on foot or by mule.

It is also completely flat. Its highest peak is 129 meters, where the fortress-like Evangelistria Monastery, a place of interest worth visiting, is located. The beaches are few but charming, with turquoise crystal-clear waters. Locals refer to them as Afetka, Hagia Sophia and Prasini Ammos, all close to each other. Besides the picturesque view, local taverns can offer you a classic traditional Magnesian meal with tsipouro or wine.
